ABSTRACT

This little book is based on the afternoon talk I gave in January 1955 to members of the Royal Society of Canada in Toronto. This society unites not only scientists, and my task was rather difficult, since there were probably only two or three mathematicians among those present. It is difficult to prepare a report for a mathematical audience that requires that it be well understood, but at the same time sufficiently informative. But how much more difficult it is to interest an audience of non-mathematicians!

Keywords: Mathematics, reflections, finding integers, the formation of mathematics, confessions of mathematics.
