

HISTORY OF UZBEK LANGUAGE IN AFGHANISTAN (FROM THE TIMURIANS OF HERAT TO THE BEGINNING OF THE 21ST CENTURY)

Assadullah Qatey

Samangan Higher Education Institute

Assadullah786qatey@gmail.com

Muhibullah Mahboob

Samangan Higher Education Institute

Mohibullahmahboob92@gmail.com

Shejauddin Hanif

Sar-e-pul Higher Education Institute

ABSTRACT

Afghanistan, which was known as Khorasan and Ariana in previous centuries, has been inhabited by different ethnic groups and tribes since ancient times. In Afghanistan, there is a vast land called Turkestan, as its name shows that the Turkish peoples i.e. (Uzbeks and Turkmens) live in it, but so far there has been less talk about the Uzbeks of Afghanistan and their language. The Uzbek language belongs to the eastern branch of Turkish languages, Turkish languages are part of the great family of Altaic languages, Turkish language was born in Iran, Afghanistan and Tajikistan with the emergence of Qarakhanians and Ghaznavians, and with the passage of time and the continuation of the rule of Turkish dynasties and The Turkish speakers flourished (Sabaghi, 2020, p. 4). The history of calligraphy and ancient literary and written works of the Uzbek language goes back to the inscriptions of "Orkhon Yenisi". These petroglyphs were obtained from the shores of the Orkhon seas in Mongolia, Yenisei (Ana-sai, meaning the mother valley) in southern Siberia, Talas in Kyrgyzstan and other areas such as Eastern Turkestan, Central Asia, the Caucasus, the Volga coast and parts of Europe (Vafai, 2008, p. 13).

Keywords: history, language, Turkish-Uzbek, Timurians and Afghanistan.

Introduction

Language is an important and essential part of culture, and as a cultural tool, it causes the transfer of cultural heritage from one generation to another. Political boundaries are also mainly aligned with linguistic boundaries.

The country of Afghanistan has been the birthplace of culture and civilization for many years, and the various ethnic groups of this land have played a key role in the development and growth of this culture and civilization. Along with other ethnic groups living in Afghanistan, Turkish-speaking poets, writers and politicians, namely Uzbeks and Turkmens have played a special role in enriching the culture and especially literature of Afghanistan, which can be mentioned by Mawlana Jalaluddin Muhammad Balkhi, Amir Ali Sher Nawai, Zahieruddin Muhammad Babar, Shahrukh Mirza and Gowharshad Begum.

In order to explain the ability of the Turkish-Uzbek language, Amir Ali Shir Nawai wrote the book (The Trial of Alghatin) in order to prove the superiority of the Uzbek language over the Persian language, and Mahmoud Kashghari also wrote the Al-Turk Dictionary of Turkish Words so that the Turkish words would not be lost, it is worth mentioning that the authors of Turkey has prepared and published a list of the words of the Al-Turk Glossary book separately (Kashghari, 1996, p. 15). The Uzbek language became especially popular in Afghanistan with the support and tact of Amir Ali Shirnawai, the most prominent, or in other words, the most influential Uzbek-Turkish poet and writer (Tuxtan et al., 2004, p. 40).

In the same way, by creating works in the Turkish-Uzbek language, Zahieruddin Babur not only takes a worthy participation in its progress and development, but also performs unforgettable services for the culture of Turkish speakers. Babur's scientific, literary and cultural heritage has not lost its scientific and historical importance and beauty even today, indeed, his masterpiece, the Baburnama, stands as one of the invaluable cultural treasures of the world (N.M. Meleh Yaif, 2000, p. 807). The Uzbek language is one of the important and living languages of the region and the world, which has an ancient history. This language includes the large family of Turkish languages, which has its roots in the languages of the Altai group, the word Uzbek is a newly emerging term, and today it is used instead of the term (Eastern Turkish) in Uzbekistan and Afghanistan. The Uzbek language is the official language of Uzbekistan and has several million speakers in Afghanistan and Tajikistan, and Uzbeks also live in all Central Asian countries and some countries in the world.

After Uzbekistan, Afghanistan is the second country in whose constitution Uzbek is registered as the official language in the regions where Uzbeks are the majority, and the Uzbek language of Afghanistan is also called the South Uzbek language.

Stages of Uzbek Language Development:

The development and evolution of the Uzbek language has passed through at least three important historical periods, which we will briefly mention.

1- Ancient Turkish Period

The history of ancient Turkey goes back to centuries BC (Before Crist) and covers up to the 10th century AD. The oral works of the ancient Turks and the inscriptions of "Orkhon Yinisi" and other written works in wood, pottery and other objects that have been discovered from different regions of Asia and Europe belong to the language of the ancient Turkish period. The most important of them are the inscriptions of the tombs of the Turkish khaqans and princes, which were obtained from the shores of the Orkhon Sea in northern Mongolia and the shores of the Yenisei Sea in southern Siberia at the end of the 19th century (Poppe, 1960, c 45).

These writings, which are all in Turkish-runic script (cryptic), were first read by the Denmark scientist and expert V. Thoms and then by the Russian expert R. Radlov and others.

2- Old Turkish Period

This period of the Turkish language includes the 11th and 14th centuries, in which there are lasting scientific-literary works such as "Divan Loghat al-Turk" by Mahmoud Kashghari, "Qutdgho Bilik" (Blessed Knowledge) by Yusuf Khas Hajeb, "Hebat al-Haqayq" by Ahmed Yogenki, "Divan Hikmat" by Khwaja Ahmad Yesavi, "Qasses al-Anbiya" by Rabghuzi, "Golestan Balturki" by Saif Saraei and "Mohabatnama" by Khwarazmi and the works of Sufi Allahyar have appeared.

3- The New Period of the Uzbek Language

This development period of the Uzbek language began in the 20th century. Countless scientific and literary texts were written in this period. In the first half of the 20th century, the first Uzbek novel "Ottgan Konler" i.e. Past Days was written by the famous Uzbek writer Abdullah Qaderi. So far, dozens of lasting literary works of Uzbek authors have been translated into several living and valid languages of the world.

Along with Istanbul Turkish, Azerbaijan Turkish, Kazakh and Uyghur language, Uzbek language is one of the Turkish languages in the world, which has more than 10 million speakers, and the rest of the Turkish languages have less than ten million speakers (Imaq, 2014, p. 15).

Today, the Uzbek language has a better position in the region and the world. Currently, about 50 million people on Earth speak the Uzbek language. Uzbek writers produce hundreds of literary works in this language every year. There are Uzbek language research centers in some universities and scientific centers of influential countries in the world such as America, Britain, France, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, China, Japan, South Korea, India, etc. Uzbek language schools have been established in more than 100 countries. More than forty decades have passed since Uzbek is the official language of Uzbekistan. Afghanistan is the second country in whose constitution Uzbek is registered as an official language in areas where Uzbeks are the majority (Kohken, 2018, pp. 3-5).

The Origin of the Turkish-Uzbek Language

The Uzbek language is one of the important languages of the Altaic or Ural-Altaic branch from a relative and genealogical point of view, and the first signs of its ancient and so-called pre-Turkish variety date back to the third century BC (Before Crist). The oldest surviving works in this language are Orkhon and Neesi inscriptions (Hazaei, 2003, p. 177). The source of origin and the starting point of the dispersion of the Turks and the roots of the Turkish-Uzbek language is in Central Asia, in the region of the Altai Mountains, which is the border between northwest China, Mongolia, southern Russia, and the eastern corners of Kazakhstan, therefore Turkish, Mongolian and Tungusic languages are called Altaic languages. Because the origin of all these language groups is from this region (Abbas Javadi, 2021, p. 15).

Uzbek Turks in Afghanistan

Afghanistan Uzbeks are counted as the third largest ethnic group after Pashtuns and Persian speakers. Most of the Uzbeks of Afghanistan live in the north and some in the west of Afghanistan, but they live scattered in most of the provinces of Afghanistan. The history of Afghanistan shows that this country was generally under the rule of the Turks until the rule of Ahmad Shah Abdali in the 18th century. Ghaznavians, Saljuqians, Khwarazm Shahians, Timurians, Shibani Uzbeks and Afshars, all of whom were from the Turkish people who ruled Afghanistan, and the Uzbeks are also the survivors of these dynasties (Fawzi, 2012, p. 550).

A large number of historical monuments of Afghanistan were created by the ancestors of Uzbeks of Afghanistan. (Timziork, 2016, p. 160).

Turkish-Uzbek Language in the Timurian era

The Timurians dominated in Afghanistan in the late 14th century, and it was during this period that Chaghtai Turkish literature (now Uzbek) appeared in the Herat city of Afghanistan under the leadership of Amir Ali Shir Nawai and Timuri King Sultan Hossain Baiqra. Chaghatai language and literature spent its most brilliant period in the era of Amir Ali Shirnawai (1501-1441) and became the literary language of this region. At the end of his life, Nawai wrote the book Muhakemata al-Ghatin for the comparison of Persian and Turkish languages, and in it, to prove the superiority of Turkish language over Persian, he has given evidence of the richness of similar Turkish verbs and words. Chaghatai Turkish (Uzbek) is influenced by Southern Turkish, especially Azari dialect, and the reason for that was the contact and communication between cultural centers such as Tabriz, Shirwan and Herat at that time, in such a way that Azari poets, writers and artisans gathered in Herat and Herat School has been the Academy of Fine Arts and Sciences.

Sultan Hossain Baiqra, who was Nawai's childhood friend, was born in 1438 in Herat (one of the current cities of Afghanistan) and sat on the throne in 1469 in Herat, and Herat became the cultural center of the East. Baiqra worked hard for the development of the Eastern Turkish language and issued an order to write in Turkish. His services in the development and evolution of Persian and Turkish-Uzbek language and literature are valuable. Hossain Baiqra also writes poetry in Turkish-Uzbek language, his time is called (golden era of Turkish-Uzbek literature) (Hielt, 2001, p. 91).

After the Herat Timurians, Zahieruddin Mohammad Babur, one of the descendants of Timur, founded the Baburyan government in Afghanistan and carried out activities for the development and flourishing of the Turkish-Uzbek language, and he personally wrote works in the Turkish-Uzbek language, as pointed to his Baburnama. In the 16th century, Babur is considered the representative of Turkish-Uzbek literature. Besides writing Turkish-Uzbek best poems, he also created the best examples of Turkish prose and played a prominent role in the promotion and development of Turkish literature. Baburnama which was description of his memories from Turkish-Uzbek language view is a masterpiece and one of the world classics in terms of content. Babur's poems were published in Petrograd in 1917. In short, the Chaghtai Turkish broadcasts of Radio Afghanistan in these two languages were stopped and it was not revived until the fall of Mohammad Davoud's government. Following the coup of 1978, when the pro-Soviet People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan came to power, Radio Afghanistan broadcasts in Uzbek and Turkmen languages started again, and these broadcasts were 30 minutes a day for each language. In the middle of 1987, the first government publication named "Yoldoz" (star) in Uzbek and Turkmen languages was published in Kabul. After a few months, another magazine called "Gunesh" (sun) started publishing in Turkmen language, and "Yoldoz" was published in Uzbek language in Kabul for about ten years. In the recent years of Dr. Najibullah's rule, this magazine was moved to Mazar-e-Sharif and became the publication organ of the Ministry of Tribal Peoples. After the fall of Dr. Najibullah's rule, Yolduz publications were published under the support of "National Islamic Movement of Afghanistan" in Mazar-e-Sharif in the form of a magazine with a small section using the limited facilities of the local printing press.

During the years of rule of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, the ground was provided for publishing books and works of Uzbek writers. The collection of poems of Uzbek poets was published by the Union of Writers. "Khamsa" by Amir Alishir Nawai, the book of Zahieruddin Muhammad Babur's poems, the poems of Mrs. Nadera and other books were published in Kabul. After the fall of Dr. Najibullah's rule, the forces of the National Islamic Movement of Afghanistan were got the control of the northern provinces for several years. In these years, Andisha, Yaghdo, Toghri Yul, Bidar, and "Voice of Islam" magazines were published in Mazar-e-Sharif, and "Jozjanan" in Sheberghan, and "Faryab" and "Qoyash" were published in Maimana, and some parts of these magazines were in Uzbek language.

In recent years, after the establishment of the republic period, the Ministry of Information and Culture published publications in the Uzbek language within the framework of the "Watandar" publications, and for whatever reason, the Uzbek section of the "Watandar" publication did not reach to the literate and educated Uzbek community (Kohken, 2018, p. 5).

During the rule of President Hamid Karzai and Mohammad Ashraf Ghani, some private media also dedicated a part of their broadcasts to Uzbek language. Local radios and televisions in the northern provinces broadcast in Uzbek. This is a positive development and a valuable step for the development of the Uzbek language. But the content of the Uzbek publications of all these media is debatable and it is beyond the scope of this article.

Uzbek Language in Schools

For the first time, education in Uzbek language started in Afghanistan schools after the revolution of 1987. The Ministry of Education created the Department of Uzbek Authoring and Translation and appointed a number of Uzbek professors to write textbooks in Uzbek language. Up to the fourth grade, all lesson topics were written and printed under the supervision and advice of Dr. Aref Osman Ouf, the Uzbek consultant of the Ministry of Education, and teaching in Uzbek language began in the schools of Uzbek-populated areas.

This program did not have a good result. The Ministry of Education did not publish Uzbek language and literature textbooks for middle and high school classes. Students who were taught in Uzbek until the fourth grade, had to study in Persian in the fifth grade. This problem caused the Uzbeks to no longer show much desire to learn in their mother tongue. This program was a good start, but it had a disappointing ending. Teaching in the mother tongue for Afghanistan Uzbek children was no longer continued.

During the administration of Hamid Karzai, the Ministry of Education of Afghanistan introduced the Uzbek language education system in the schools of the Uzbek-populated areas. The Ministry of Education published Uzbek language books up to the sixth grade. Unfortunately, the lack of formation for Uzbek language teachers in schools, the non-inclusion of graduates of the Uzbek language and literature departments of universities and teacher training institutions in teacher recruitment exams, and the non-inclusion of Uzbek language lessons in the education curriculum were among other problems that Ministry of Education did not solve them (Ebrahim, 2013, p. 2).

Uzbek Language in Universities and Academic Institutions:

The Department of Uzbek language was opened for the first time in 1983 at the Faculty of Language and Literature of Kabul University. This department continued its activity until the end of Dr. Najibullah's rule in (1992). With the beginning of the civil wars, the door of the Uzbek department in Kabul University was closed and it was not active for nearly three decades. In the Department of Uzbek Language and Literature of Kabul University, in addition to the local professors, several professors specializing in Uzbek language and literature from the Soviet Republic of Uzbekistan were teaching at the time.

Dozens of students, most of whom were Uzbeks, graduated from this department, some of them started teaching Uzbek language in universities and teacher training institutes in the northern provinces of the country, and still there are some Uzbek teachers who are busy in teaching Uzbek language in the universities of northern Afghanistan.

During the Republic period, about 7 departments of Uzbek language and literature began to operate in the universities of the northern provinces of the country and are still operating, and with the Department of Uzbek language and literature of Kabul University, the number of active departments of Uzbek language and literature in the country are eight departments. In the same way, during the Republic period and before that, Uzbek language and literature departments were established in the teacher training institutions of nine northern provinces of the country, but unfortunately, there were problems in the process due to the lack of sufficient and up-to-date teaching materials and the lack of harmony in the curriculum between the departments, there was problems in the procedure of education, and the lack of expert professors with master's and doctorate degrees also kept the level of educational efficiency in these departments at its lowest level, and with the return of the Islamic Emirate, the offices of teacher training institutions were removed by the Ministry of Education.

As mentioned, Uzbek language has the most speakers in Afghanistan after Persian (Dari) and Pashto languages. Currently, Uzbeks of Afghanistan live in almost half of the country's provinces. The Uzbek language, as an important element of Afghanistan's connection with Turkish-speaking countries, especially Uzbekistan, has provided good opportunities for regional convergence for our country, and this language has a high capacity for development in Afghanistan. In recent years, new opportunities have emerged for the cultivation and development of the Uzbek language (Kohken, 2018, p. 3).

Status of the Uzbek Language during the Reign of Mohammad Ashraf Ghani:

Mohammad Ashraf Ghani, the President of the Republic of Afghanistan, during his presidency, has repeatedly mentioned the richness and importance of the history of Uzbek language in the region. During his presidency, he took steps to improve the position of the Uzbek language in Afghanistan. The beginning of publications of the presidential palace and some government offices in Uzbek language and the approval of the "National Day of the Uzbek Language" in Afghanistan can be considered as symbolic steps to improve the position of the Uzbek language.

In the autumn of 2019, October 20 was recognized as the national day of the Uzbek language in Afghanistan. In a meeting with President Ghani and the leadership of the government, representatives of a number of Afghanistan Uzbeks cultural organizations proposed to name this day as the National Uzbek Language Day in Afghanistan, which was accepted by President Ashraf Ghani and the cabinet was approved it in a meeting and thus this day was included in the official calendar of this country.

In 2019, the Presidential Palace of Afghanistan held a commemoration ceremony for the first time to celebrate this day.

But with the victory of the Islamic Emarat again in 2021, the Uzbek language has once again been neglected. Now it is necessary for the elders of the Uzbek people to take other decisive steps to remove the factors that have hindered the development of the Uzbek language and pay attention in order to institutionalize the position of the Uzbek language in the country as the language of a significant and influential part of the population of Afghanistan.

Result: Examining the situation of the Turkish-Uzbek language in recent centuries in Afghanistan shows that it has not been given as much attention as it should have been, and no important measures have been taken for the development of this language.

The period of growth and prosperity of the Turkish-Uzbek language in Afghanistan goes back to the era of the Timurian of Herat, headed by Amir Ali Shir Nawaii, Zahieruddin Mohammad Babur and Gowharshad Begum, who did important work in this field for the development and prosperity of this language and the works Especially Amir Ali Shir Nawaii and Zahieruddin Mohammad Babur wrote a valid book in Turkish-Uzbek language and made it available to the Turkish speakers of the region.

Uzbek language writers and poets until the time of Amir Ali Shir Nawaii had not benefited from the richness of the Turkish-Uzbek language and its wide possibilities in a fundamental way, the treasures of this language were kept hidden, but. Amir Ali Shir Nawaii began his journey as an author, creating valuable works in Turkish-Uzbek language that ultimately propelled him to great renown as an esteemed poet and author. His literary contributions have earned him a high standing in the hearts of the Turkish community, cementing his place as a revered figure in their cultural heritage.

After the fall of Timurians' rule of Herat, the long period of stagnation of Uzbek language and literature begins in Afghanistan, after the fall of the rule of Sultan Hossain Baiqra, this irreplaceable supporter of civilization and culture, the brilliant literary environment of that era also disappears. Uzbek language and literature can no longer flourish in this land.

Undoubtedly, in the last centuries, the Turkish-Uzbek language in Afghanistan has been disrespected by the government from every point of view, and the statesmen have not done anything important for the growth and prosperity of this language. According to the constitution of Afghanistan during the Republic period, after Pashto and Persian (Dari) languages, Uzbek language is recognized as the official language in the Uzbek nation regions of Afghanistan, and according to this, Uzbek language should be taught in public schools and universities in the Uzbek-populated areas. According to this law, the Islamic Emarat of Afghanistan must provide education for children in their mother tongue, but unfortunately, linguists and cultural experts consider all these factors to be the neglect of the Islamic Emarat towards the Uzbek-Turkish language.

In 2012, the Ministry of Education of Afghanistan printed books in Uzbek language and sent them to some Uzbek provinces, including some areas of Balkh province. But unfortunately, the way of writing and compiling these books was objected by a number of Afghanistan Uzbek cultural experts and linguists. One of the professors of Uzbek-Turkish language at Kabul University said: "Some special words of Uzbek language are not included in the book, the grammar is not observed and the sentences are incomplete in terms of grammar and syntax, and in some places words are misplaced."

REFERENCES

- 1- Ibrahim, Mohammad Rahim (2013). Afghan Uzbek Literature, Kabul: Bolot Publications.
- 2- Imaq, Faizullah (2019). Turkish-Uzbek vocabulary in Farsi, 2nd edition, Kabul, Shabak Publications.
- 3- Barzgar, Irfan (2019). National Uzbek Language Day, Kabul, Neshana news agency in collaboration with Qoresh Institution.
- 4- Payman, Wahid (2022). Turkish descendants of Afghanistan, Wahid Peyman's personal blog.
- 5- Taxten W.M. and Et al (1384). Timurians. Translated by Yaqub Azhand, Tehran: National.
- 6- Timzyork, Fari (2016). Language policy and history of Turkish education in Afghanistan, Turklik publication of Turkey.

- 7- Sabbaghi, Ali (2011). The Specialized Journal of the Stylistics of Persian Poetry and Prose (Bahar Adab), fourth year, number 11.
- 8- Javadi, Abbas (2021). How the Turks became Muslims, digital publication, DJavadi. Contact:Abbas@gmail.com.
- 9- Fawzi, Firouz (2012). Turkish culture and literature in Afghanistan, Batman University International Science and Culture Symposium.
- 10- Kargar, Abdullah (2011). Turkestan Land and Rulers, Kabul, Al-Azhar Publishing House.
- 11- Kashghari, Mahmoud (1996). Dictionary of Al-Turk, translator: Seyyed Mohammad Dabir Siyaqi, Turkey: Ankara.
- 12- Kohkan, Mohammad Alam. (2018). Hasht Sobh Newspaper, Afghanistan: Kabul, No. 2150.
- 13- N.M. Meleh Yaif. (2000). History of Uzbek Turkish Literature, translated by Burhanuddin Namaq Shahrani, Afghanistan Publishing House: Kabul University.
- 14- Hait, Javad (1997). A Journey through the History of the Turkish Language and Dialects, Tehran, Neshrno Publishing House.
- 15- Vafaei, Abbas Ali (2006). The Influence of Persian Language on Uzbek Language, Tehran: Al-Hadi.
- 16 - Poppe, N (1960). Vergleichende Grammatik der Altaischen Sprachen I. Vergleichende Wiesbaden: Lautlehre. Poppe, N. (1965). Introd.

